so that there is no possibility of escape, it very frequently gets beyond your touch and even your vision by Trose who are addicted to stars Trose who are addicted to stars Trose who are addicted to stars gring, for in-tance, and turn their gring, for in-tance, and turn their gring, for in-tance, and turn their eyes to the Poisr luminary, think they are seeing the star itself, but they are not; it takes light, which they are not; it takes light, which they are not, it is no hat what we ne from that orb; so that what we need and may not, since it reay centre and may not, since it reay not seen extinguished 149 years have been extinguished 149 years and some months ago and we would keep on booking at what was, but is no longe, and fully believe we see it every time we I lok that way. In any case we are simply beholding at onto of luminosity whose radicance began its long but swift journey at least two lifetimes ago, and the twinkle we behold was inhended by those who manage the far-away source there if for our great grand-parents. If a railroad train traveling at the rate of a Soda Springs excursion were to start for Polarts to-day, it would be attracted and train the baskets and other conveniences, for it would take them just 3 967,585,814,062 387 years to get there, and by the time they got tack their children would not know them and Unah would be a State; Hen Butter and Susan B. Anthony would in all probability be dead and Vermon the a Democratic common wealth.

All this brings up a train of care, therefore a got a rath of care.

Anthony would in supported to commonwealth.

All this brings up a train of cars, thought as well as a train of cars. You can't always tell. You see and yu don't see. The human optical power is easily decived and the human surjectly organ's often asira. We think we see things when we don't, and are sure we have heard things which never had an existence. Or all created beings man is the most helpless at the commencement of his career, the most doubtful during his progress through life, and the most useless when his days are narrowed to a spin. There is no exception to this rule, at least I have been able to find none in the Emerchological Britannica, the Natt Lake Herrally, or the Utah Gazetter.

LAKE HERGLD, or the Utah Gezetteer.

A man to fortune and to fame unknown is not necessarily the person we take him to be. The reason we lock upon him as a no-account is because we only see that person of him which best accords with our inherited shortslightedness and imperfeet judgment. We see him not as he actually as at all times, butar an in t and depraved faculty causes us to see him. The same terso , under such froum threes salety clus of perfection; and yet he is exactly the being he was before. For instance—A man who once hanled wood into a Missouri town for a living, and on a cold day in January got drunk and fell into a besofted stoper on his load, and would have froz n to death but for the limely arrival of a neighbor, was of course an object of general contempt; nobody cared about taking with him in a public place; and if he had entered a crand parkor or a high-toned compile, he would doubtless have been he ched into the street; he was looked upon with one pair of eyes them, and the judgment created behind the eyes was that he was a bad case; it was another pair of eyes
bad case; it was another pair of eyes
bad case; it was another pair of eyes
bad case; it was another pair of eyes then, and the judgment created behind the eyes was that he was a bad case; it was another pair of eyes in the same person that looked upon him ten years later when he walked up the steps of the executive man, sion at Washington as President of the United States. The man had not greatly changed his habits nor had, the people who would previously have cast bim out jobtained different visionary organs—they had een the wrong man or taken the wrong time for their obseryations; that was all. Singular leave, the Ran all A man to fortune and to fame unthe wrong man or taken the wrong time for their observations; that was all. Singular, tan't it? But we all do it. On the other hand, it is easy to remember a man who once sailed on the high tide of prosperity in the empire cly of the Union; a hundred the contract of the union; a hundred the contract of the union; a hundred to dred thousand men only waited to hear his pleasure to see it performed, basked in hoty transports in the sunshine of his smiles and were transported to realms of costacy when he took them by the band. He was the greatest tenefactor to the poor of his reight-orhood they had ever known; but when some, perhaps most, of those same persons afterwards ratified the jadgment when sent the autocrat into a prisen after the suntered his We he teneral that he readed his We he teneral that he would have thought dred thousand men only waited to
